

Grundy County fact that you might not know

Georgia E. Patton Washington
First Female African-American Physician & Surgeon
(1864-1900)

Georgia E. Patton Washington was the first African-American woman licensed physician and surgeon in the state of Tennessee, U.S.A. and one of the first African-American medical missionaries in Africa. She was born April 16, 1864, as a slave in Pelham, located in Grundy County, Tennessee, but was freed with all the slaves after the conclusion of the American Civil War. She attended Nashville's Central Tennessee College for four years and then enrolled in Meharry Medical School in Nashville from which she graduated in 1893 as a medical doctor. Soon after graduation, she sailed to Liberia as a missionary and paid for the passage herself because her church couldn't afford the expense. She practiced medicine in Liberia for about two years until her health suffered and she had to return to the United States. After her return, she opened a medical practice in Memphis, Tennessee, and married David Washington, one of the most highly respected local letter carriers. The couple had one child who died. Georgia Washington died November 8, 1900, at the age of thirty-six.

Bibliography:

The Book of African-American Women; 150 Crusaders, Creators, and Uplifters* by Tonya Bolden, Adams Media Corporation, 1996

<http://www.distinguishedwomen.com/biographies/washington-gep.html>

From: Janelle Taylor
To: Anna & Katie Goforth; Anna Mary Parker; Angie Burnett; Mary Campbell; Megan & Chris Benton; Lucille Scissom; Catherine Flury; Inez Winton; Jackie Partin; Hope Baggenstoss; Jerry Davenport; Tracy City Public Library; Chuck Sherrill; Janice White; Sue Parrott; Sue Scott; Ladue Bouldin; Oliver Jervis; Bob & Jane Douglas; Bettye Sherwood; Janelle Taylor; Russ Bucchan; Sharon Bonner
Date: 9/14/2006 6:12:45 AM
Subject: odd fact about Grundy

Grundy County fact that you might not know

Georgia E. Patton Washington
First Female African-American Physician & Surgeon
(1864-1900)

Georgia E. Patton Washington was the first African-American woman licensed physician and surgeon in the state of Tennessee, U.S.A. and one of the first African-American medical missionaries in Africa. She was born April 16, 1864, as a slave in Pelham, located in Grundy County, Tennessee, but was freed with all the slaves after the conclusion of the American Civil War. She attended Nashville's Central Tennessee College for four years and then enrolled in Meharry Medical School in Nashville from which she graduated in 1893 as a medical doctor. Soon after graduation, she sailed to Liberia as a missionary and paid for the passage herself because her church couldn't afford the expense. She practiced medicine in Liberia for about two years until her health suffered and she had to return to the United States. After her return, she opened a medical practice in Memphis, Tennessee, and married David Washington, one of the most highly respected local letter carriers. The couple had one child who died. Georgia Washington died November 8, 1900, at the age of thirty-six.

Bibliography:

The Book of African-American Women; 150 Crusaders, Creators, and Uplifters by Tonya Bolden, Adams Media Corporation, 1996

<http://www.distinguishedwomen.com/biographies/washington-gep.html>